

1. What do you do and from where do you do it?
2. That leads us to the two most important questions of the interview:
 - How do you stand the humidity in the summer? How many alligators have you fought?
3. Now that the interesting part is over, tell us more about your work. What exactly does a WordPress consultant do?
4. What's your WordPress "origin story"?
 - Moveable Type? How did you become a developer? How did you become a core lead developer?
5. Of all of your contributions to WordPress (not necessarily to core), which one are you most proud of?
6. How annoyed are you with people asking about 3.6?
7. So, WordPress 3.6... [long awkward pause] We know that it was a tough release to lead, but we both listened to your talk in London about the hard decisions made in that release, and agree that it's not only a great lesson for WP, but also for software development in general... can you talk about some of the decisions you had to make and how core dev changed after that?
8. What's next for you? Any juicy parts of core you've been eyeing? Any cool fun clients or projects you've been working with
